Roku Express streams live channels and on-demand content to up to 4 devices simultaneously. Use Amazon FireTV and Android TV as a kind of personal set top box with apps, games, and web browsing using Android TV 3rd party Android TV apps such as Netflix, Google Play Movies, Spotify and more can stream live channels and on-demand content to your device. For more details and information on these devices check out my full article here The good There are plenty of options to stream to a variety of different devices. Streaming is relatively easy (once you've downloaded the app). Generally, if it's not out-of-box supported, it should be easy to find an alternative that works. The bad While it's easy to set up most devices, you'll need a good internet connection. There are many apps and devices with the same name that will not work together. For example, watchESPN is going to be different to watchESPN, and you need to install both to make it work. Audio quality can be excellent or poor, depending on the quality of the product. A good example of the quality you can expect is on Apple TV with the Apple Originals and even Netflix. I could write an entire article on the bad things about the quality, but there is a huge variety of devices, and if you're streaming video the quality will depend on the hardware of the streaming device and the internet connection you're using. There's an enormous amount of streaming content available (including live TV and movies). The media industry, and the internet in general, loves to innovate and create original content. There are apps that make watching TV content a whole lot of fun, whether you're watching games or reality TV. Examples of these are Hulu, Netflix, HBO Go, Sling TV and Apple TV. Streaming apps like Netflix have a lot of content, but in my opinion don't have the best quality available. While Netflix has a very large amount of content available, it will never have every movie and TV show available. This is the reason why, for me, Sling TV is a much better option. Sling TV has a lot of great, original content, as well as popular content like ABC, CBS, Fox, NBC, ESPN, HGTV, PBS, Comedy Central and 82157476af
